Introduction

This document exemplifies my approach to managing my research related bibliography. The technical details and additional background about my tool chain are summarized at Staudinger (2017). All my references are formatted according to Harvard (author-date) style, as summarized at Cite Them Right.

I use Harvard style referencing, cite them right v.10.

Types of references and bibliography entries

Web references

Here's a simple URL on the web, using an entry of type online:

```
@online{matsumoto,
    author = "Matsumoto, D. and  Hwang, H. and Sandoval, D.", title = "The funnel approach to questioning and eliciting information",
```

    year = "2015",
    note = "Available at: http://davidmatsumoto.com/content/TPjan15-info-mat-hwa-sand\%201.p
}

... gives: Matsumoto, Hwang and Sandoval (2015)

Books

Simple book

Next, a simple print book.

@book{huff1,
    Author = "Anne Sigismund Huff",
    Year = "2009",
    Title = "Designing research for publication",
    publisher = "London, UK: Sage"
```

... gives Huff (2009), by the way, this is a good overview about how to structure and do your research when you intend to publish your research. There are more pitfalls then you might imagine. Anne Huff, by the time of this writing a lecturer in Berlin, has provided a comprehensive overview of all relevant aspects.

Book with an edition

On to a simple book with an edition entry, available as print:

```
@book{pedler,
    author = "Mike Pedler",
    title= "Action Learning for Managers",
    year = "2012",
    edition = "8th",
    location = "Aldershot, UK",
    publisher = "Gower Publishing"
```

... gives Pedler (2012), by the way, that's a very brief introduction into Revan's concept of action learning. The title says "for Managers", I still wonder why all books aimed at managers are thin (less than 100 pages) and printed with font size 14 pt ... Are managers considered to be in a hurry?

Book with edition, available online

Now something more fancy, a book with an edition that's also online.

```
@book{rogers1971,
    author = "Everett M. Rogers",
    title = "Diffusions of Innovations",
    year = "1971",
    edition = "2nd",
    location = "NY, US",
    publisher = "The Free Press",
    note = "Available at: https://goo.gl/jk6feB (Accessed: 23 August 2017)"
}

... gives Rogers (1971), a book that covers supporting and opposing forces to stimulate or hinder the diffusion of innovation. It also tells about opinion leaders, adopters, and the role of organizations in spreading innovation. A good read, although other sources are more up to date (I think of Kuhn).

Book with an editor

A book with a plain editor looks like this.

@book{gold1,
  title = "Gower Handbook of Leadership and Management Development",
  year = "2014",
  editor = "Jeff Gold and Richard Thorpe and Alan Mumford", edition = "5th",
  publisher = "Aldershot, UK: Gower Publishing",
}

Gold, Thorpe and Mumford (2014) are the editors of a great encyclopedia on leadership and management development. I ue it when I need a quick introduction into a related topic from where to research further.

Book with an editor, referencing the works of an author in this book

Relevant reference at Cite Them Right.

A book with author and editor, such as a chapter in a book (that's an inbook bibtex entry):

```
@InBook{schon,
  title     = ,
  publisher = ,
  year      = ,
  author    = ,
  editor    = ,
  note      = ,
  booktitle = ,
```

Which would yield Schoen (2001). If I remember correctly, this work stemmed from research into insider research, action research, and alike. Ok, skimmed it again .. it's about reflection on and in action, rigor and relevance, and Edgar Schein's division of professional knowledge (the epistemology).

Articles in Journals

A simple article, with one author, available online: Raelin (2001)

Few authors with DOI: Zuber-Skerritt (2002)

Five authors (et al should appear): Kuokkanen et al. (2007)

Remarks

In my bibtex file, I need to escape the % sign. For sources available online, I keep things simple and add a note that carries the text Available at: (Accessed: . . .).
